

Optical traps are now a quantitative tool for single-molecule biophysics experiments. Many experiments use several traps, with focussed light beams each holding a micron