

This December, a newly-elected Liberal government will represent Canada at the COP21 climate negotiations in Paris.

We now know that COP21 is unlikely to meet its stated goal to limit warming at two degrees Celsius above pre-industrial averages. The world has already warmed by half this amount, and enough carbon pollution is in the atmosphere to result in another 0.5 degrees warming, even if all other emissions halted today.