exhibition design to give rise to diverse responses in an expanded range of spectators. Beyond a mutual excitement in curation, these scholars were able to share research and explore curatorial acts through case-study. Future issues will apply this format, where graduate editors rotate to explore topics that are close to them as scholars, so to expand the field of interest and generate a research network.

This issue was produced by Mallory Gemmel and myself with editorial assistance from Siying Duan, Nadeem Kajani, Lea Hogan, Zaki Rezwan and Jennifer Anderson. We are grateful for the continuing mentorship of Dr. Laura U. Marks and recognize the generous small publications grant she put forth to fund the production of our first print issue. Additionally, this issue is indebted to the School for the Contemporary Arts at SFU, in particular the faculty support of Denise Oleksijczuk, Peter Dickinson and Elspeth Pratt.
