Goal of the MPH Thesis

The MPH Thesis is a culminating experience that requires students to synthesize at least three MPH competencies; the three competencies must include at least one foundation and one concentration competency and integrate the knowledge they have acquired in coursework and other learning experiences throughout the MPH Program (including but not exclusive to the practicum). The culminating experience consists of the mentored preparation of a thesis and successful presentation of this thesis before the student's senior supervisor, and their thesis committee including an external examiner. The Master's Thesis generally involves a critical investigation of a public health issue or prob

Assessment of Competencies

On the Readiness to Defend Form the Supervisory Committee confirmed that the student identified at least three MPH competencies including at least one foundation and one concentration competency to be addressed. For each competency selected by the student in their proposal for their thesis, indicate to what extent the thesis met the defined competency.

1 = Unable	Unable to perform skill or very little knowledge of the item
