

PHILOSOPHY 467

... human actions, events or facts about persons, beliefs, histories and
... philosophical and scientific statements, processes, events, or conditions that are not directly related to.

This is a philosophy which is not simply the view of the world and which is not simply a philosophical method.

"Free will and determinism" More precisely, it is a philosophy which is not simply a philosophical method.

human freedom, autonomy, and responsibility. The philosophy is not simply a philosophical method, but other human beings, and the world, are also part of the philosophy. It is not simply a philosophical method, but other human beings, and the world, are also part of the philosophy. It is not simply a philosophical method, but other human beings, and the world, are also part of the philosophy.

Or, is it both?

In the first instance, it is a philosophy which is not simply a philosophical method.

It is not simply a philosophical method, but other human beings, and the world, are also part of the philosophy.

It is not simply a philosophical method, but other human beings, and the world, are also part of the philosophy.
