

PHILOSOPHY 111

MORAL ISSUES AND THEORIES

1. The first part of the course deals with the foundations of moral philosophy. It begins with a discussion of the nature of morality and the role of moral theory. We then turn to the question of the good life, and consider the views of Aristotle and the Stoics. The second part of the course deals with the major moral theories of the modern period. We begin with utilitarianism, and then consider deontological theories, such as Kant's theory of duty. Finally, we look at virtue ethics and the idea of the good person.

2. The third part of the course deals with applied ethics. We begin with a discussion of the trolley problem and the issue of killing versus letting die. We then turn to the issue of abortion, and consider the arguments for and against it. Finally, we look at the issue of euthanasia and the right to die.

3. The fourth part of the course deals with the foundations of moral philosophy. It begins with a discussion of the nature of morality and the role of moral theory. We then turn to the question of the good life, and consider the views of Aristotle and the Stoics. The second part of the course deals with the major moral theories of the modern period. We begin with utilitarianism, and then consider deontological theories, such as Kant's theory of duty. Finally, we look at virtue ethics and the idea of the good person.

4. The fifth part of the course deals with applied ethics. We begin with a discussion of the trolley problem and the issue of killing versus letting die. We then turn to the issue of abortion, and consider the arguments for and against it. Finally, we look at the issue of euthanasia and the right to die.

5. The sixth part of the course deals with the foundations of moral philosophy. It begins with a discussion of the nature of morality and the role of moral theory. We then turn to the question of the good life, and consider the views of Aristotle and the Stoics. The second part of the course deals with the major moral theories of the modern period. We begin with utilitarianism, and then consider deontological theories, such as Kant's theory of duty. Finally, we look at virtue ethics and the idea of the good person.

6. The seventh part of the course deals with applied ethics. We begin with a discussion of the trolley problem and the issue of killing versus letting die. We then turn to the issue of abortion, and consider the arguments for and against it. Finally, we look at the issue of euthanasia and the right to die.

7. The eighth part of the course deals with the foundations of moral philosophy. It begins with a discussion of the nature of morality and the role of moral theory. We then turn to the question of the good life, and consider the views of Aristotle and the Stoics. The second part of the course deals with the major moral theories of the modern period. We begin with utilitarianism, and then consider deontological theories, such as Kant's theory of duty. Finally, we look at virtue ethics and the idea of the good person.

8. The ninth part of the course deals with applied ethics. We begin with a discussion of the trolley problem and the issue of killing versus letting die. We then turn to the issue of abortion, and consider the arguments for and against it. Finally, we look at the issue of euthanasia and the right to die.

9. The tenth part of the course deals with the foundations of moral philosophy. It begins with a discussion of the nature of morality and the role of moral theory. We then turn to the question of the good life, and consider the views of Aristotle and the Stoics. The second part of the course deals with the major moral theories of the modern period. We begin with utilitarianism, and then consider deontological theories, such as Kant's theory of duty. Finally, we look at virtue ethics and the idea of the good person.

10. The eleventh part of the course deals with applied ethics. We begin with a discussion of the trolley problem and the issue of killing versus letting die. We then turn to the issue of abortion, and consider the arguments for and against it. Finally, we look at the issue of euthanasia and the right to die.

11. The twelfth part of the course deals with the foundations of moral philosophy. It begins with a discussion of the nature of morality and the role of moral theory. We then turn to the question of the good life, and consider the views of Aristotle and the Stoics. The second part of the course deals with the major moral theories of the modern period. We begin with utilitarianism, and then consider deontological theories, such as Kant's theory of duty. Finally, we look at virtue ethics and the idea of the good person.